OUR NEIGHBORS.
San Gabriel.
SAN GABRIEL, April 20.—[Correspondence of THE TIMES.] There is a piece of sharp practice on the part of our N. C. B. neighbors that have not as yet been ventilated in the papers, and that should not be allowed to pass unnoticed. They come to San Gabriel and buy the orange crops on the trees, and then ship them as from Sacramento and other places. The fact that they do so I am prepared to establish, should its truth be questioned. This is on a par with the reports telegraphed to the eastern press that so many carloads of trainloads of oranges are from time to time shipped from Sacramento, when in fact they are merely shipped through Sacramento from Southern California. It is time a stop were put to such dishonest practices.

Mr. Bruce Gibson of Savannah yesterday buried his only remaining child. Less than a month ago his young and amiable wife was laid to rest, a victim of that fell disease, consumption. Mr. Gibson has the sincere sympathy of his friends in his bereavement.

We have recently had several heavy frosts, which I fear give us about all the moisture we are likely to get from the recent threatening weather. Many fields of barley are badly needing a few good showers. We will not despair as yet, though if the frosts do not appear inside of a week or two they will do more harm than good.

Judge Gardiner has removed from San Gabriel to his beautiful residence near the corner of Adams and Figure streets, Los Angeles. We are sorry to lose so good a neighbor as the Judge.

Two of our young bloods had a scrapping-match in a private hall here a few evenings ago. They went at it in regular Yorkshire fashion, using fists, teeth and boots, but no other weapons. The best man won.

Constable de la Ossa is about to have put up a brick calaboose for this village, the expense to be defrayed by private subscription. Our merchants and other citizens have subscribed liberally, so that a safe and suitable receptacle may be provided for desperate characters who come here occasionally from Pasadena and other temperance localities to blow off steam and fill up with benzine.

The course of THE TIMES in regard to the Southern Pacific monopoly has the approval of our citizens without regard to party. In fact, THE TIMES is looked upon as the newspaper of Southern California and the peer of any in the State.

How long shall we be compelled to endure the present miserable mail service? We generally have to wait until the afternoon for our morning papers, that we should have with our coffee. Cannot THE TIMES help us out in this matter?

The vineyards of this locality never looked more thrifty or vigorous. Many orchards and vineyards that last year were cut up into town lots and neglected to weeds and neglect, have this season been put into their usual excellent shape. This is a wise move, as the town-lot craze, if there were no let up to it, would soon ruin the best and richest portions of our country. Fewer town lots and very many more five and ten-acre farms should be our watchword.

The Hotel San Gabriel has not as yet been opened to the public. The finishing touches are being put on the interior, and the ample grounds are being beautified.

A new station named Rosemead has been established between East San Gabriel and Savannah, in the vicinity, and we presume, principally for the accommodation of L. J. Rose's extensive estates. We have been informed that Mr. Rose intends to pipe water all over the large tract of land he purchased last year in the neighborhood.

TOO MANY NOVELS.
The Government Aiding the Dissemination of French Literature.
[Washington Star.]
Col. Donn Platt and Librarian Spofford appeared Monday afternoon before the Senate Committee on Post-offices and Postroads to advocate amendment and passage of the House bill to prohibit the transmission of cheap literature by mail at 1 cent a pound. Col. Platt said they appeared to ask for three separate inquiries. First, the postoffices of the United States which complain of being overburdened with mechanical matter; second, the authors and honest publishers of the country who complain of unjust freight discrimination; and third, the outraged conscience of the country. By the misuse of the word "periodicals" in a law, the mails had become crowded with matter, of which the Seaside Library publications are an example, to such an extent that our postal cars must be changed to freight cars if it goes further. The Third Assistant Postmaster General had authorized him to state this. It was an insult to intelligence to call such a publication as the one exhibited (a volume of the Seaside) a periodical. All that appealed to the lowest passions of the lowest classes were being distributed by the Government in partnership with the publishers, and that under the plea of disseminating knowledge. They included the novels of Mrs. Braddon, which ought to be called the "bigamy class," those of "Ouida," the "adultery class," and the Jack Sheppard class of publications. The poison was made just as attractive as great genius could make it. The tastes of the people were not cultured. The public schools had turned out their millions of readers, who have education, without what might be called culture. He did not wish to excite popular prejudices, but would say that that education which teaches a man to think is not the education of our common schools, where men are taught how to make a living, with the result that they are turned out with the taste for reading, but without the culture that ought to accompany it. Mr. Platt closed with an appeal for justice to American authors. Mr. Spofford, the Librarian of Congress, said he appeared in connection with a resolution of the Association of Librarians. A committee of that association had called upon the Postmaster-General and found that, while he was in favor of extending any general privileges conferred by the present law so as to cover books sent out by legitimate libraries to their subscribers, yet he did not approve the law, and was about to recommend a measure for its repeal. That measure was now before the committee. He (Spofford) was for fair play, for the greatest good to the greatest number, and if the cheap literature was to be sent through the mails at special rates, the librarians were unanimously in favor of having library books accorded equal rights. By the laws of Congress these quasi-periodical publications were accorded enormous special privileges, yet he would not insult the intelligence of the committee by asking for complete books, published 50 or 60 years ago, in any sense of the term, periodicals. The law now discriminated against the American authors. In the Lovell library only 225 were American works out of a total of 840. This law, he said, was a fiction an advantage over fact. He read from a letter written by Jefferson setting forth, in striking terms, the evils which may result to a people among whom the taste for fiction had become a ruling trait, and stated with vehemence his own condemnation of the class of literature to which the country was served so abundantly under the present condition of things. He cited the bigamy and adultery classes of Braddon and "Ouida," and vile productions of Dumas, the younger, and the coarse and brutal works of Zola, which, he said, are being scattered broadcast to the freeways of the land.

LETTERS TO THE TIMES.
Card from Detective Lucas.
LUCAS'S AGENCY, LOS ANGELES.
April 20.—[To the Editor of THE TIMES.] In the matter of the allegation, purporting to come from the twice-convicted thief, William Elton, and appearing in your columns yesterday, I desire space simply to ask for suspension of public sentiment until, at my forthcoming examination, I may be able to refute them, as I certainly will. I also wish to say that it is untrue that I ever received from the thief mentioned any valuable property whatever, knowing the same to have been stolen, and all statements that I have made so are false.
Respectfully,
A. J. LUCAS.

A Remarkable Jump.
[Pomona Progress.]
The passengers in the rear car on the Southern Pacific train that leaves Los Angeles at 4:35 p.m. and arrives at Pomona at 5:30 were excited at the act of an unknown man in the car, on Tuesday afternoon. The man was short and thin, and about 30 years of age. He boarded the train at Los Angeles. He was intoxicated, and, upon reaching his seat, at once dropped into a doze. His ticket was for Pomona. The train, being a little behind time, was dashing along at the rate of 40 miles an hour between Puente and Spadra, when the man suddenly arose from his seat and ran to the car door. Before any one could stop him he was out upon the platform of the car, and a moment later he leaped off to the ground. Every one in the car was excited and fully expected to see him grind to death beneath the car-wheels or to see him horribly injured by the awful leap. Every window in the car was pushed up in a second. All the passengers looked out after the drunken man who was seen slowly picking himself up from the sand along the side of the railroad track and then to walk off slowly toward Puente station, as if he was accustomed to leap from a moving train in that fashion a dozen times a day. It is indeed remarkable that the man was not killed outright.

DEPENDENT PENSIONS.
Taxpayers to Be Bled for the Benefit of Democrats.
[New York Times.]
The action of the House Committee on the Dependent Pension Bill, recently passed by the Senate, can be explained in one way only. It is a higher bid than the Senate made for the vote of such soldiers as can be influenced by it. In the slang of the card-table, the Democrats of the House committee "see" the Senate and "go better." It is not a creditable proceeding, and, if the House should approve it, the Senate, actuated by the same motives, will probably accept the action of the House, and the responsibility for final decision will rest with the President. At this point, at least, the country may rely on the measure being considered and treated on its merits, with a fair view to the real interests of the whole country, and with independence and courage enough to get at the actual facts. As an incident in the game of politics, the course of the bill so far reveals a singularly shallow and unintelligent view of party relations and party policy. As a matter of genuine public concern, requiring deliberate judgment and an honorable respect for the rights of taxpayers and of veterans alike, we can only say that, up to the present time, no such treatment has been accorded to it by prominent men of either party in either house.

Our readers may remember that the Senate bill was declared on the floor of that body when it was under discussion to be the bill prepared by the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic, with little or no modification. An argument as to its provisions or suggestion as to safeguards that should be thrown around it were met with complacent simplicity by the statement of this fact, as if that ought to be conclusive. It was this: that veterans unable to support themselves should be maintained by the Federal Treasury. That was what the Grand Army asked and what the Senate voted to give. But the House committee has gone off on an entirely different tack. They have amended the Senate bill so as to give every veteran totally disabled for the performance of manual labor, who is dependent on such labor for the means of living or not, a pension of 1 cent per month for each day of service during the War of the Rebellion, and the same pension, whether disabled or not, if he shall have reached the age 62 years. This means a pension of from $10.80 to $175.20 per year, according as the claimant served from 90 days to four years in the army. It is entirely apart from the nature of his services, and is not affected by the fact that he may never have seen a battlefield or smelled burned gunpowder, or saved from a salute. It is quite apart from his circumstances, and must go to him just the same, though he may have a competence or even wealth of his own. It is conditioned only on disability for the performance of manual labor, though he might be quite capable of supporting himself by clerical or professional work. This is, as we have already pointed out, not asked for by the Grand Army of the Republic or by any other organization of veterans, so far as we are aware. Politically, this action of the House committee is a condition of a bribe for the Democrats will be lost by the veto which the President is almost sure to visit upon such a bill. A more gratuitous abandonment of the responsibility of legislators we have never seen.

A Combine of the Planters.
[New York Globe.]
The farmers of Texas have got up a combine worthy of note all over the Union. They have organized a stock company with unlimited capital—that is, more money is offered than can be at present used—to erect exchanges, warehouses and manufacturing for the sale of cotton and its manufacture, and the manufacture of all kinds of agricultural implements. The several hundred acres north of the city, known as the Cole Farm Grounds, have been purchased and are being put in order for the reception of machinery for making plows, rakes, buckets, harness and many other articles, as well as a cotton gin. The combine is now in the cotton exchange and warehouse is being erected in the heart of the city, where, perhaps, half of the crop of the State will be sold by sample. It is expected that this organization will lead to a dictation of prices to some extent, at least, and if the alliances of other cotton States can be brought to cooperate with Texas, it is thought perfectly practicable to raise the price to 15 or 25 cents per pound.

The backers of the movement say it is high time cotton planters were going into a trust, and it only needs an initiation and an opportunity for success to be everywhere accepted with an avidity that would astonish the world and "make Rome howl."

"I Tell You, Husband, I Want You to Try It."
I had suffered for years with a complaint the physicians called gravel, and they had given me the utmost to help me. My wife heard of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, made at Rondout, N.
